*ketches of Carlyle. When a great man dies nowauays and leaves the world, as the London Times says, "duller and colder and darker" for his having faded away, the columns of the daily press immediately supply a mass of information about him sufficient for a good sized volume of biography-Hundreds of obitancy articles on Thomas Carlyle have appeared wherever the English lan-Composed of the first class companies guage is spokeo, and many Continental newspapers, especial y in Germany and France, also mention in terms of respect and veneration the Scottish philosopher who, laden with years, has at length passed into wast he himself called the ecercal silence. His character, his sayings, his influence on the world in which he lived for s longer peried than is the usual allotment of this city, offering entire security and promising man-all have had ample justice done to them, and it may be interesting to cult from the newsprompt and liberal settlement in case of loss. papers some of the paragraphs which bring him before us with most clearness and pow er. The humble or gio of the great man is well known to all. He simself has told how, when he was visited by Carlisle, the antiquarian, the feb14-1m meeting took place in a field where he and his father were busily ploughing. It is not so generally known, however, that the family DHILIP B. HOOE, AGENT

Liverpool & London & Globs Fire Ins. Co., N. Y. Underwriters' Agency Fire Ins. Co.,
Petersburg Savings and Ins. Co., from which he sprung possessed vist estates in Cumberland at the time of the Norman conquest, and that he was at one time collecting materials for its history. One section of the tamily, it appears, emigrated across the border to Dumfries and res. to wealth and power, even intermarrying with the royal family of Scotland and founding the Castle of Ter horwold, the ruins of which are still standing. The best sketch of the philosopher at home is to be found in the London Daily News. "It was generally in the evening," says the writer, "that Mr. Cariyle was surrounded by his friends. Tea was the usual preliminary, and after it the philosopher-especially in later years-was accustomed to take his seat, half reclining, on the floor, so that the bowl of his long clay pipe migat reach the neighborhood of the fire-place and its tumes go up the chimney. Then he would pour out his wonderful talk which seemed to be of immeasurable range and richness. It mattered little what subject was sugguest, was sure to find that here was one who had never heard before. The present writer has known him to tak about birds until one would have said he must have passed his life in the study of ornithelegy, until the next time ne heard him dissoursing about tea or coffee, GOVERNMENT BONDS or words or myclos that he was in the presence of one who had explored nearly every part of of one who had explored nearly every part of LOCAL STOCKS AND ALL FIRST CLASS

RAILBOAD BONDS.
AND OTHER GOOD INVESTMENT SE.
CURITIES.

Of one who had explored nearly every part of the world he lived in to the furthest point.
Not less impressive than the matter was the manner of his wonderful talk. Sometimes his face would flome with the wrath or earnest ness which his subject kindled, and his listener sbrank as before a gathering storm; but it might be that some droll aspect of the case would sud deply earch his ty, and the storm would burst in thurderous but not unmusical laughter; or still oftener, some delicate or tender association would surprise his stormy path, and in a moment his voice would sink to the sweetness of a lute. The tobacco pipe always seemed to be a sign of the inward workings of the sublime talker; it would send out thick clouds, or quiet blus curls, as its master's story or argument grew vehement or gentle; but it was sure to go out at nearly every punctuation of his long sentences, and to have to be relighted many times in the course of the evening. Sometimes in the summer wilight be would sit with a fellow smoker in his garden, and it might be on such occasions there would be long meditative pauses-balt hours or more of absolute silence-for whenever Mr. Carlyle sat still under the open aky his mind inclined to silence. Another paragraph, also apparently by one who knew him, appears in the St. James' Gazette:-"The extraordinary charm of his conversation and manner is known only to a few. He had a stately native courtesy, dignity and consideration for the feelings of others, which, act with standing some small defects of temper, must have struck every one who approached him. He was not at his best when he was allowed to have all the conversation to himself, for in such cases he talked (as was natural) too much like his books; but when he was io company where he was obliged to give and take he was the most charming of tolkers. His laugh was freedom and cordiality itself. His humor was at once so powerful and so subtle that it seemed to exhaust the matters on which it touched. His shrewdness, especially in judg ing of character from small indications, was ex traordinary. He once denounced as a scoutdrel a man of business who at the time was in the best repute, and who shortly afterward turned out to deserve all that had been said against him. "How," he was asked, "did you find him out, Mc. Carlyle?" "O1," said he, 'I saw rogue in the twist of the false hip of him as he went out at the door." He was once saked what he thought of a new acquaintarc whom he had seen for a few minutes.
